Answer

Definitely not. In fact it's necessary to not worship me for any reason. I am just a normal person just as any other person including yourself is a normal person. I do not encourage anybody to worship another person, ever. The problem with worshipping another person is that we put the person in place of God and this is what has been done with me for 2,000 years. And to be honest, I do not like this at all; in fact it is one of the reasons why I have decided to return, to correct these teachings that I should be worshipped. I am not God, I will never be God and I should never be worshipped.

My suggestion to any person who listens to me is that they just listen to me and then analyse for themselves whether what I am saying is true or not. Through their own experience they need to examine or listen to the material if they wish to. If they then wish, they could put the material into practice to work out whether the material works or not, but they do not ever, ever worship me. And any person who tries or attempts to worship me, I instantly ask that they remove themselves from my presence, because I have no desire whatsoever to be worshipped.

I also have no desire whatsoever to be king or lord over any person and every time I am placed in this position I feel that it is usurping where I believe God's position should be in the heart of the individual. These are emotions that are reserved for God alone, to be worshipped, to be king, for God alone to be the person who with whom we have the relationship. There is no need for a person to have a relationship with me in order to have a relationship with God and there is no need for a person to go through me in order to have a relationship with God.

And all of these teachings I feel are not only false, but they are also very misleading and very damaging to a person's relationship with God. I feel this whole idea of worship of myself is a very damaging concept and definitely needs to be corrected.
