20121113 Cults S01Q20

Question	Wikipedia says; "In the mass media, and among average citizens, "cult" gained an increasingly negative connotation, becoming associated with things like kidnapping, brainwashing, psychological abuse, sexual abuse and other criminal activity, and mass suicide. While most of these negative qualities usually have real documented precedents in the activities of a very small minority of new religious groups, mass culture often extends them to any religious group viewed as culturally deviant, however peaceful or law-abiding it may be. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cult - cite_note-9" Do you have a "cult" headquarters?

Answer

(Laughs) No. We don't have a cult, so we can't have a headquarters. Actually it's interesting; the original statement about that came from the Channel 7 crew, who actually stayed in our home. They came here to this home, stayed in our home, in both of our bedrooms. We let them have both of our bedrooms, and we went down into a tent, and while they were staying in our home they did all of this filming and all of this stuff going around, which later they called their hidden camera filming, which they came to do. And then in their reports, they called it the cult headquarters and since then almost every media outlet has said, "Where's your cult headquarters?" And we've had people even come to visit us here, who say to us "Oh, is this your cult headquarters, is this your headquarters?" and we go, "No, this is our home, for goodness sake, like, what do you think is going on here?"

It all came about just because the Channel 7 TV programme wanted to portray us as a cult, having some kind of headquarters and large amounts of money that we had disposable. This is a home I bought before I met Mary, seven or eight years ago, before anybody gave me any donation whatsoever. I bought this home out of my own funds that I earned during business and now it's being referred to as the cult headquarters that somebody else has donated to us. And I find that quite amusing.
